Subject: Microsoft Settlement

Hi,

I think it is very apparent the proposed Microsoft settlement neglects some significant areas. It does nothing to; prohibit the illegal conduct and similar conduct in the future, spark competition in the software industry or deprive Microsoft of its illegal gains. I believe the judicial system is required to insure these types of remedies are made when violations of anti-trust laws occur. I believe the evidence of Microsoft's gross disregard for conducting itself in a legal manner and the costly detriment consumers have suffered should compel an attempt to uphold the law rather than brushing it aside, as seems to be happening. Other concerns regarding the exposure of children to Microsoft's products are additional issues. If the judicial system does not seek to enforce the laws of the United States, what pupose does it serve?
